Leigh Henderson
Managing Director
Leadership Training Room, LLC

Leigh Henderson is a successful management consultant and leadership coach based in New York City. She helps leaders level the playing field of obstacles blocking optimum performance and career advancement.

Leigh is valued by her clients as a wise advisor and trusted partner. Her clarity and on-point advice addressing complex organizational and individual change efforts are exceptional.

An accomplished speaker and writer, Leigh develops and delivers presentations for corporations, professional associations, university audiences, and civic organizations.

Temping with Tycoons: Reinvention Lessons for Laid off Leaders is LTR's latest level playing field special report. Leigh's interviews with business leaders have been published by national and international magazines. An informal chronicle of her observations, thoughts, and advice on how to level the playing field can be found at her blog, www.workingtobealeader.com.

Leigh is an adjunct instructor in the Management Department at the Zicklin School of Business, part of Baruch College, the nation's most diverse campus. She earned a bachelor's degree in social welfare from the University of California at Berkeley and a master's degree in early childhood education from Boston State College. She is a native of South Central Los Angeles.

The Manhattan resident travels frequently to the West Coast to see her eleven nieces and nephews plus their children. She feels, "They are always teaching me how to be a good aunt."
